A NOTABLE FUNEBAL.

In pall a dozen hmesthe stary as told how the remains of Lieut Irving were recently buried in Education. But that brief mention calls up the story which is ever full of interest to Angle Saxon ears. It is thirty five years and more succe the man whose dust was Friday given sepulchre in Edinburg, sailed away from his native land. There was joy and hope in every heart, for the leader of the expedition was a man who as a boy, fought at Copeningen who later helped give the signals at Trafalgar where, of forty who stood around him thirty three were killed or wounded, who explicted the ner found coasts of Australia and superceived lay on the barren sands for, days and weeks but finally escaped, whose next venture was in the seas aroun. Spitzlergen weeked hay on the barren sands for days and weeks but finally escaped, whese next wen ture was in the seas aroun? Spitzbergen and the next by find to explore the boundless waste between Hindson's Bay and the Archie say, who from every peritous place whither frum under a battle campy or an Archie sky had emerged trumphasm. This was a prestige of success and a promise of triumph and so se the chifs of England grow than in the distance theore was repoleing in the little ships for had not Britons for a thomand years been courting glory in facing hardships and danger and were not these of that from stock? But this was to be a final voyage. All were domed the commander was to be smong the first to succeimb and after him one by one all the rest were to fall. On the desolate coasts of the north their bones were stream, the under in the placers were to become their graves and the rectivere to fall. On the desolate coasts of the north their bones were stream, the under in the glacers were to become their graves and the rectivery their headstones. The body of Irving was found and by an American ship was brought to New York and sent thence to his native land and around the poor fragment men gathered to pay the last lonors who are of a generation which has grown up same the winderer sailed away in the doubt and brought it beat, that it might rest where on the headstone children might read the story of a brive his secrified to science and still it seems to me it would have been just as well to have left the tred body where it fell left it a part of the mystery of the voccless morth left it week a wollength of the vollenge of a lare that only beat a cound it to somethus, that the test it to be a that the left it reself a menument of the valer and persistence of a lare that only beat the lastone of
